INDONESIANS Grace Murbant Muchtar and Supandi Djojoadirono were married in Rome recently in dual rites that conformed to both Western and Indonesian custom. At right Supandi kisses his bride after the civil rite at Rome's Campidoglio, or City Hall. Above, in the Indonesian ceremony, the newlyweds are offered yellow rice, from which each will feed the other as a symbol of future contentment with their mutual lot. Another feature of the ceremony, which was held in an Indonesian private home here, included a battle of leaves from the Javanese "sirih" tree, in which the bridegroom strove to hit the bride before she hit him, to ensure he would not be henpecked but master in his own house. The bride also washed the bridegroom's feet with rose water in the "kembang seatman" ritual, and both sat in the bridegroom's father's lap, to enable him to give, in answer to the traditional question as to who was heavier, the traditional answer that they were of equal weight and thus signify that both newlyweds would receive equal love from both sets of parents. The bride is a student of music here, the husband an official of the Indonesian Embassy.

Heat Is 'Killing Us,' Frenchmen's Diaries Say

CAIRO, Nov. 9 (AP)—The last words recorded in the diaries of two Frenchmen lost in the Nubian Desert with two Americans were: "The four of us are hopeless. We've a very thin chance of surviving."

The morning paper Al Ahram said today frontier authorities have finished going through the diaries of Frenchmen Jean Pillu and Yves Tommy-Martin which were the only diaries that spoke of the rugged desert trip.

Treacherous, Hectic Road

Pillu's diary, written up June 29 for the last time, reads, Al Ahram said: "We woke up at five, had breakfast quickly and began to continue our journey across the treacherous, hectic road. At about two in the afternoon we tried to sleep but the heat made it impossible and we resumed the journey again. Our fears are increasing hour after hour. The road is full of rocks and bumps and we are fearing the petrol tank may be damaged any minute while the car wheels are wading through sand and the strong heat is about to kill us.

"In any case we think we are about 100 or 150 kolometers (62-93 miles) from Wadi Halfa. We have not come across a single post on the way yet."

Martin's diary read: "June 30. I woke up ten minutes ago. Dawn is starting to send its first white threads. I can still see some stars in the sky and the moon is still in crescent form.

"After a little while the sun will rise and the desert will become hell again. We started our trip a short while after waking up. We hope to complete the crossing of the desert by the nightfall. It is two o'clock in the afternoon and our water supply is finished. We tried searching for a well nearby but could not find one. Despair is increasing fast in everyone of us. No water. We're waiting for a good chance of survival."

The bodies of the two Frenchmen and that of John Armstrong of Belleville, N.J., were found by a desert search patrol on Oct. 26. With them was the corpse of their Arab guide.

The other member of the expedition, Donald Shannon of Milwaukee, Wis., is still missing.

The party set out by car from Aswan July 28 for the Sudanese border town of Wadi Halfa but became lost in the vast Nubian Desert.

Africa Riots

Ruandi-Urundi-Congo frontier, said martial law had been decreed in all Ruanda territory. State police and troops were rushed from the neighboring Congo to protect the Batutsis against what seemed an overall attack from their secular and more numerous rival tribe, the Bahutus.
