Crisis Talks Considered By Gronchi

By United Press International
Italian President Giovanni Gronchi retired to the quiet of his study yesterday to ponder on the results of his five day consultation prior to designating Italy's next premier.

Gronchi completed his formal round of consultations Wednesday. Today he reflects over the possibilities of Italy's complicated political chess-board.

What he had to find was a workable formula that could produce a government capable of governing a nation apparently politically split down the line between left and right without having to count on either extremes.

The powerful Communist Party has retained its leadership with Stalinist Palmiro Togliatti emerging as fully in charge of the Red's efforts to get a foot in the government.

Almost simultaneously the Vatican unofficially wanted Italian politicians to steer clear of any alliance involving the left-wing Socialists of Pietro Nenni.

The warning was given by the Vatican City newspaper Osservatore della Domenica and was obviously aimed at the faction of the Christian Democratic Party which favored such a solution.

work. His description was relayed from Agadir to Air Force Europe headquarters in Wiesbaden, Germany.

Andrews' team, working continuously for 24 hours in a devastated section of Agadir's native quarter, rescued 19 victims, most of them buried alive under tons of debris from 24 to 36 hours.

"It was more heartening to count the live ones we found rather than the dead," said Andrews, who works in the Nouasseur air base installations covered about four square blocks. It was difficult to determine where to begin. Usually on a tip from a native survivor, we could dig where someone alive was trapped. When one of our airmen would signal that he suspected life from somewhere under the mountain of debris, dozens would join him to help dig frantically.

"Many would beg us to dig through their houses in search of missing family members. Too frequently we would find all dead," Andrews continued.

Speaking for his 57-man team, he said, "We hate to leave because just before our relief arrived one of our boys heard the sound of a crying baby from deep inside the rubble of a house. We all wanted to stay long enough at least to dig out that one."

"I just hope that new shift keeps digging away there because the baby would have been in there about 38 hours when we had to leave."

Yesterday, the wife of a U.S. Air Force officer was rescued after being trapped in the wreckage of an earthquake-shattered hotel for 38 1/2 hours.

Alive but suffering from shock is Mrs. Margaret Martin of St. Albans, W. Va.

Mrs. Martin was saved by French sailors and U.S. Marines. She was brought out of the wreckage of the Saada Hotel after a six-foot hole was dug in the concrete rubble.

De Gaulle

general, De Gaulle flew to the Constantine region of Eastern Algeria. By jeep and helicopter he pressed on to command posts in two sectors thick with rebel forces. De Gaulle's movements were kept secret and he was guarded by heavy security forces. No foreign newsmen were permitted to go on the trip.

The French News Agency carried the substance of De Gaulle's remarks to officers and non-commissioned officers assembled in command post tents.

The President is expected to remain in Algeria three or four days. There was no indication whether he would visit Algiers, where last Jan. 24 right wing European settlers revolted against De Gaulle's self-determination policy for Algeria.

De Gaulle's office let it be known that he was going to Algeria sometime today but made no official announcement and the 69-year-old President slipped out of his Paris palace without being noticed before dawn today.

difficult. About two hours before landing at Paramaribo, the crew noticed a drop in the oil quantity gauge. The Number Four engine oil gauge was identified as the location of trouble and one hour out of Paramaribo, a flickering warning light on the instrument panel immediately ordered the engine shut down.

Drapeer emphasized to newsmen that he had no doubts about the plane reaching Paramaribo safely on three engines.

Just before leaving Uruguay, Eisenhower and President Benito Nardone issued a joint "Declaration of Montevideo" repudiating all types of anti-democratic actions. They pledged their adherence to the principle of non-intervention in the affairs of other American countries and agreed to use their efforts to increase economic, social and cultural cooperation.

Then the two Presidents gave each other a hearty abrazo — the South American Bearhug Embrace — and Eisenhower boarded his plane, waving and grinning.

Eisenhower said goodbye in Spanish: "Hasta Luego." He was up early. He gave a short talk to U.S. Embassy personnel and their families at the Embassy residence before boarding his helicopter for the trip to the Montevideo airport. He told them they, and all other Americans, are ambassadors of good will.

"If we can't make progress along this line," he said, "then I'm pretty pessimistic about this poor old world."

The city was quiet around the University of Montevideo, where anti-U.S. demonstrations marred the Uruguayans' otherwise friendly reception yesterday.

in a service club on the post. It turned into a near-mob scene, with photographers pressing in for more and more pictures.

He posed with several female admirers and kissed them at the demand of the cameramen. Flame-haired actress Tina Louise was on hand to greet the teen-ager idol.

Presley told newsmen his immediate plans were to visit his home in Memphis, Tenn., and then to plunge into television and motion picture work.

Man Tops Electric Brain In Eight Year Theft Spree

NEW YORK, March 3 (UPI) — A Wall Street brokerage firm reported a $250,000 shortage yesterday in what may be the first major recorded case of a man cheating an electronic brain.

V. C. Walston, president of Walston and Co., a major investment firm with 70 branches in the U.S. and overseas, called a news conference to announce that Frank B. Haderer, 50, a vice-president of the company, had admitted misappropriating money for at least eight years.

The company president said Haderer had been in charge of the company's electronic computers for a number of years. He supervised installation of the computing department in 1949.

According to Walston, Haderer went to the computer department at hours when no other company employees were present, once even at 5:30 a.m. on a Sunday, and altered punched cards fed to computers.

Walston said Haderer changed cards covering the company's interest income account and his and his wife's personal accounts.

Haderer was arrested a few hours after the news conference. His arrest resulted from an investigation by the district attorney's office.

Haderer has been dismissed since discovery of the thefts and a complaint was filed on Monday.

"He would destroy the master card and punch out a substitute card showing the interest income balance to be substantially less than it should be," Walston said. "Haderer and his wife maintained deposit and margin trading accounts with us. He would then punch out his cards crediting his account or his wife's fictitious deposits equaling the amounts by which he had doctored the interest income account card."
