Shah Weds 'Radiant' Farah

signed the royal family marriage register.

Following the ceremony, the Shah and Queen Farah stood side by side amid banks of flowers in the Hall of Mirrors to receive the congratulations and good wishes of their guests.

Outside the palace under a warm autumn-like sun, a crowd of several thousand people strained against police lines for a glimpse of the palace garden.

The guests were in formal attire—white tie for men except officials and military who wore dress uniform, and almost without exception ankle-length dresses for women.

Most of the women came hatless. Those who did wear hats invariably had only small half-hats, sometimes just a bit of ribbon or fur. One exception was the wife of the French Ambassador, Mme. Henri Roux, a small blonde woman who wore a large light-blue velvet hat with a grey satin dress and lavender gloves.

While the guests looked at the gifts, they toasted the newlyweds in Pommery 1945 champagne. Outside in the palace garden, the band of the Imperial Guards played lively airs.

High point of the ceremony came when the Shah and Farah gave their consent to the marriage contract. The chief of court protocol then produced a gold tray on which there were two plain gold rings. The Shah took one and put it on Farah's ring finger. Farah took the other and put it on the Shah's finger.

To each guest passing to shake his hand, the Shah handed a gold coin and a tiny velvet box of "Dragees," symbolic of sweetness, happiness and fertility. Farah stood beside him smiling broadly, sometimes laughing as she accepted the good wishes of Tehran's elite.

Poison Plot

RFE itself last week. RFE officials asserted that atropine, a poisonous drug, had been found Nov. 21 in salt shakers of the station's cafeteria which serves 1,200 employes.

A few days later, the U.S. Army issued a statement that its counter intelligence men had identified Jaroslav Nemec, Czechoslovak vice consul in Salzburg, Austria, as the supplier of the poison.

In a 300-word statement, CTK charged RFE and its privately financed, American-operated head organization, the Free Europe Committee, were systematically stirring up the cold war and directing espionage and subversive activities against the East

Meanwhile, in Munich, the Czech consulate official who allegedly planned the poisoning plot was still missing today while a mystery developed over his whereabouts. Nemec appeared to have completely disappeared from Salzburg, Austria, where he was stationed with the Czech consulate.

Salzburg police refused to reveal whether Nemec is still in Austria or whether they are investigating the case. It was believed likely by informed sources that Nemec has already left for Prague.

ITALIAN Sergio Giudici, who could not speak English when he arrived in Tasmania, Australia, 11 years ago has been chosen Tasmanian Rhodes Scholar for 1960. Sergio left Sernio (Lombardy) in 1948 to join his father, who is a foreman with the Hydro Electric Commission in Tasmania. His classmates helped him learn English and after the first year he topped his class. In 1955 he matriculated from Hobart Technical High School and won a Commonwealth Scholarship to the university. So far in his course at the university he has won six high distinctions and four distinctions. He is housemaster at the Springvale hostel for country boys attending Hobart Technical High School and is majoring in Civil Engineering for his bachelor's degree at the University of Tasmania. He will leave next August for Rome where he will see the Olympic Games before going to Oxford to continue his studies.

Steel Talks Enter New Round

tomorrow at 11 a.m. and 2.30 p.m. Finnegan refused to give an opinion whether today's development indicated any progress towards settling the long-deadlocked dispute.

"I'll let the parties speak for themselves," he said. The comments from the parties indicated no advances whatsoever in Monday's meeting toward solution of the basic differences which caused last fall's 116-day shutdown.

The scheduling of talks across the country next Sunday made it clear that President Eisenhower won't get what he had asked for—a settlement before he returns tomorrow night from his 11-nation peace tour.

Townsend

to "the mountains."

The wedding was so discreet.

Even town hall employes did not know it was on.

Not a reporter or photographer was in sight.

A friend of Townsend broke the news — but not until the couple were safely on their way.

"There was no religious ceremony of any kind," Townsend's friend said.

He added: "It was brief. The formal ceremony took place in French. The burgomaster briefly addressed the couple in English, wishing them happiness."

Townsend formally announced his engagement to Marie-Luce last Oct. 10.

The next day, he held a news conference in the garden of the Jamagne family's plush estate in the residential district of Brasschaet. He introduced his fiancée to reporters and discussed his future plans.

At the time he said he was planning to get married within three months.

Marie-Luce was born July 3, 1939. Townsend, a divorcee and father of two children, was born Nov. 22, 1914.

N-Talks

partment press officer Lincoln White said no decision has been made whether to extend the U.S. voluntary suspension of tests past the present Dec. 31 expiration date. Secretary of State Christian A. Herter has said the U.S. ban would be continued on a week-to-week basis if sufficient progress towards establishing an adequate control system was made at the threepower talks at Geneva.

White said today that sufficient progress had not been made. He accused the Soviet scientists of "strong political attitudes" in the discussion of U.S. data which showed underground nuclear explosions mode difficult to detect than first thought.
