It's Up To The Voters In November

crats and 174 Republicans in the House. The lineup in the Senate is 64 to 36.

That looks like a working majority for the President. But he frequently points out that the tally on some key measures has been very close and that a switch of only two or three votes would have changed to victory.

The Republicans, meanwhile, gleefully remind him that when the Senate killed "Medicare," 21 Democrats, including a number of committee chairmen, voted against the bill. They laugh at his description of this total as "a handful."

Kennedy says that if the Democrats lose five seats in the House in November, his working majority, "such as it is," will be gone.

He would like to gain five seats, and to pick up 10 would be "wonderful."

His advisors, who demonstrated considerable political acumen during his own campaign of 1960, say it will be a victory if Democratic majorities hold at the present levels — in short, if they can break even.

Four principal imponderables bear on the outlook for November.

One is economy.

A recession, whatever the dimensions, would give the Republicans added ammunition. They could ascribe it to Kennedy's fiscal policies, his handling of the steel price case, his allegedly "anti-business" posture. They already are calling the break in stock market prices the "Kennedy Crash."

A second is the perennial question: Can a popular President invest the candidates in his party with some of his popularity? Polls indicate that Kennedy's stock is high now. But not even former President Eisenhower's immense popularity was enough to give him a Republican Congress.

A third pivots on the ability of Kennedy and other Democrats to explain complicated legislation, and to fire the voters to indignation over what Congress did to specific measures.

The proposal for a Department of Urban Affairs, for example. How many people understand what its functions would be and why the administration says such an agency is needed?

Health assistance for the aged is another case in point. The pros and cons of the various proposals on it are not easy to understand. The White House mail reportedly shows that a majority of the writers favor Kennedy's proposal, but not by any overwhelming margins. Anyway, since letter-writing campaigns can be organized, the mail is not necessarily a reliable barometer of public opinion.

And finally, there is the factor of political history.

In all the mid-term elections of this century, the party holding the White House made relative gains in Congress only once. In 1934, during Franklin D. Roosevelt's first term, the Democrats picked up 10 Senate seats and one in the House. Otherwise, the "ins" always lost ground. Thus, Kennedy frequently says, "History is against us."

This year, however, the Democrats hopefully advance a proposition that can be termed the "fat theory."

It is based on the proposition that when a President is elected by an overwhelming majority, he pulls in with him a number of congressmen who would not have made it on their own. They constitute that "fat," and are most likely to be defeated in the mid-term election.

Kennedy came to the presidency with a razor-thin margin, not a great majority. Therefore, the reasoning goes, there is no "fat" among the Democrats in Congress now, and therefore history may not run true to form next fall. Q.E.D.

However, one Washington lobbyist is betting that the Republicans will gain 25 seats in the House.

Kennedy summed up the position in these words:

"If the American people are against these programs, they'll vote Republican and we will have a state of where the President believes one thing and the Congress another for two years and we'll have inaction . . . they will choose either to put anchor or set sail. So we'll see in November."

Whites, Negroes Battle In London

LONDON, Aug. 9 (Reuter) — A fight between 150 white and colored youths broke out in the northwest London suburb of Harlesden last night.

The fight, which began at a fun fair between a white and a colored youth, quickly spread.

Police in five patrol cars arrived at the scene as a hostile crowd was trying to overturn a truck in which two colored men were attempting to escape. They quickly restored order.

took off without incident. The plane reached Boston in the afternoon and Rockwell was once again back in his own country. He made no comment.

Earlier, at Pan Am's office at London Airport, several callers who muffled their voices and did not identify themselves said bombs were aboard Rockwell's plane.

The bomb threats only delayed the plane for 12 minutes. While Rockwell got briskly from a car into the plane, a plainclothes man went and bought him a one-way ticket to the U.S., using Rockwell's money.

Rockwell was arrested last night as he approached the offices of the Daily Mirror, a mass-circulation London newspaper. He had earlier contacted one of the paper's reporters and said he wished to give himself up to the police.

Rockwell, former U.S. Navy pilot, attended the British National Socialist movement's camp near Chelmsford in Essex.

Later her mother took her for a real sea ride. The smooth swimming Mrs Kennedy piloted Caroline out 25 yards from shore aboard an inflated water mattress.

The beach at Conco dei Marini drops off fast. Twenty five yards offshore isn't wading water—it's 10 to 12 feet deep.

There was no water skiing for Mrs Kennedy but a motor launch stood ready for that anytime she wants.

Instead, she left Caroline in the wading water and went by launch for a visit to the Emeraldo Grotto, a famous tourist site a mile away.

Mrs Kennedy and Caroline returned to their villa in a tiny Italian umbrella-topped beach car. They spent the day at the beach with the president's wife's sister, Princess Lee Radziwill, and her two small children.

Mrs Kennedy is spending her Italian vacation at a villa rented by Princess Radziwill.

Last night after Mrs Kennedy arrived from New York she stayed in the villa, resting from the transatlantic plane trip.

Direct telephone communications have been installed between the villa and the United States and it seemed likely that Mrs Kennedy might have used the link last night to tell her husband that she and Caroline had arived safely and well.

Would-Be Priest Sent Up Again

NAPLES, Aug. 9 (AP)—Giovanni Froldio, who insists on dressing and acting like a priest despite the law, was in trouble again today.

The 32-year-old Froldio, who first took to clerical garb when he was 19, was sentenced by a local judge Tuesday to eight months in jail and a 50,000 lire ($80) fine for fraud. It was the fourth time he had been punished since 1948.

Authorities said Froldio, who hails from Genoa, had celebrated Catholic masses during his years of illegal masquerading but had never performed a marriage.

eral of the Algerian Foreign Ministry, thanked Gaverin for the gift, which, he said, followed "numerous Soviet aid shipments received during our war of independence, in circumstances immeasurably more difficult, that made a significant contribution to changing the balance of forces to the enemy's disadvantage."

The Algerian authorities would undertake a campaign "to explain to the Algerian people who its real friends are," Harbi added.

There was a small mystery about the cargo of the Ugleuralsk, a ship of 11,800-ton displacement built in Warnemuende, East Germany, in 1958. It was lying as low as possible in the water and clearly carrying its full capacity cargo of 3,000 metric tons. But the captain, Feodor Vassilievitch, said he carried no cargo in addition to the gift of 6,300 tons of wheat.

lation to start a 12-day visit to Britain. They were accompanied by their two grandchildren—Lloyd David Eisenhower II, 14 and his sister Barbara Anne, 13.

Ike said he and Mamie plan to see plenty of the historic sights of London during their six-day stay in the British capital.

They have a lunch appointment with Queen Elizabeth II tomorrow and a dinner date with Prime Minister Macmillan tomorrow night.

Algiers Braces For Battle

Provisional Government — called in troops from the four loyal Willayas and the National Liberation Army (ALN).

Before the communications were cut, European settlers reported seeing heavy columns passing Charon on the Highway Number 4 and Vialar and Bourbaki on Highway 14.

Both area were approximately 150 miles from Algiers.

The soldiers were clad in their usual Czechoslovakian helmets as they rolled in darkness northeast, toward the capital.

Their commander was Marxist-leaning Colonel Houari Boumediene.

Guerrilla troops of Wilayas Three and Four called on the population to resist Ben Bella's play for power which they branded as a "fascist dictatorship."

But despite heated appeals, no visible defense efforts have been made thus far inthe capital.

Earlier in the day, French military sources said they doubted that a major clash was imminent.

Some reports telephoned to the capital earlier in the day said Algerian artillery units were leaving Mostagamen, east of Oran.

The Algerian Army, stationed in Morocco and Tunisia before independence, is equipped in 85 milimeter and 105 milimeter Soviet cannon. It also has 75 milimeter Chinese anti aircraft guns.

Jordan Signs Close Ties With Arabia

DAMASCUS, Syria, Aug. 30 (AP) — Saudi Arabia's King Saud and Jordan's King Hussein have announced in a joint communique they agreed to merge their armed forces into "outright unity" and immediately establish a joint Saudi-Jordanian military high command.

The two Arab monarchs also declared their two neighboring countries' "economic unity" and decided to abolish all restrictions against free movement of capital and personnel between them, according to the communique broadcast simultaneously by Mecca and Amman Radios.

They vowed unshakeable adherence to "the sacred Arab right in Palestine" and pledged to work through a joint plan to recover Palestine from Israel "at whatever cost," the communique added.

Virtually spelling out a new Saudi-Jordanian axis in the Arab world, the communique said the two kings called upon all other Arab powers to join these agreements.

The communique was formally announced in the two capitals shortly after Hussein's arrival in Amman from his three-day visit to Saud.

Mrs Kennedy

President's wife let word drift around that she wished to be left in peace.

"I want to spend this vacation as a simple tourist," a member of the U.S. Secret Service guard quoted her as saying.

And Mrs Kennedy meant it. Day after day she and her party, whose rule was informality, behaved as easy-going vacationers.

Mrs Kennedy devoted most of her time at the beach to waterskiing, swimming and sun-bathing. Little Caroline, who made fast friendship with a dozen Italian children of her age, played and splashed happily in the water.

Ravello was filled today with posters in English reading: "Come back Jacqueline."

Mrs Kennedy will leave tomorrow from the hard-dirt landing trip of Ponte Gagnano Airfield near Salerno for a one hour flight aboard a chartered twin-engine Beechcraft plane to Fiumicino International Airport in Rome.

From there she will fly back to New York.

U.S. May Push Jan. 1 N-Truce

GENEVA, Aug. 30 (Reuter)—The U.S. is expected to propose tomorrow that Jan. 1 next should be set a target date for an end of nuclear testing under a workable treaty, Western sources said today.

American sources at the disarmament conference here stressed that a halt to tests would have to come under one or the other of the two draft treaties tabled last Monday by Britain and the U.S.

One provides for a comprehensive test ban, with some inspection, the second for a partial ban excluding underground tests but dispensing with on-site inspection, which the Soviet Union resists.

sion of the General Assembly." Thant told newsmen at a press conference in Moscow's Sovietskaya Hotel. "Of course he does not exclude the possibility of attendance at a later date if circumstances warrant."

The conference was held shortly before the Secretary General took off for Warsaw on a continuation of a brief European tour.

When U Thant was asked whether Khrushchev gave any indication that he would like to meet President Kennedy to discuss world problems, the Secretary replied:

"He gave the impression he would like to meet President Kennedy if the occasion demands such a meeting."

Kennedy described Wirtz as an able lawyer with long experience in labor-management relations.

Wirtz has served as an arbitrator in many labor-management disputes. He is a one-time law partner of Adlai E. Stevenson, now U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations.

Sculpture Or Plain Rock?

sons. Many of them were skeptical and some made no attempt to hide it.

For years, the earliest known art work by man was believed done in the Aurignacean Period (30,000 to 40,000 years ago), when Cro-Magnon Man lived.

Matthes says the pieces of silex (firestone) that he found 40 feet deep in the steep, clay banks of the Elbe near Hamburg-Wittenbergen not only date from the Mousterian Period of Neanderthal Man but also show incisions indicating they were deliberate attempts at sculpture.

The slides he flashed on the screen were photographs of crudely outlined animals and human faces. The details followed no unified configuration. One or two revealed clean, sharp gougings that looked like eyes, mouths, cheekbones and ears.

Many heads shook in disbelief and several tongues clucked as Matthes lectured. One of the doubters — Prof. E. Schmid of the University of Bonn's Department of Geologic Archeology — said later that the sculptures appeared to be nothing more than rocks whose shape coincidentally resembles a known object.

Matthes, aware of the criticism, was undismayed when he spoke with the Associated Press after his lecture. He said he has found 50 of the pieces so far after five years of work. Most are no bigger than a large walnut. A few are the size of a melon. He unwrapped a few of the smaller pieces from their protective cloth.

"I was extremely skeptical myself at first," he said.

"I am pleased that you are interested in this cause for humanity," he added.

Ezio Nocentini, manager of the Italian office of Montgomery Ward & Co. in Florence, sent along his firm's contribution of 10,000 lire, and a check of 5,000 lire each came from G.E.M. and W.W.F.

All the money collected by the newspaper will be turned over to responsible Italian authorities in charge of rehabilitation work in the south of Italy in the wake of last week's earthquake which killed 19 persons and injured hundreds.

Anyone wishing to contribute may send a check or money order to Earthquake, Daily American, 8 Via Dandolo, Rome. All gifts will be acknowledged publicly and a strict accounting kept of all money received.
