Rusk Quietly Urges Envoys To Learn New Languages

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28 (UPI)— Secretary of State Dean Rusk has quietly been trying to persuade his new ambassadors to learn the language of the countries in which they will serve.

The State Department announced it was setting up special language courses for new chiefs of missions and that several new ambassadors already had said they would sign up.

These included Lt. Gen. James Gavin, who is going to France; Bernard Guffler, new ambassador to Ceylon who is going to Finland, and former deputy undersecretary Raymond Hare, who is going to Turkey.

The 17 new ambassadors so far appointed by President Kennedy have not exactly been ordered to take language training.

As one Foreign Service officer put it, "You don't order a presidential appointee to do anything." But they were told that "the Secretary feels it would be best" if they did sign up for the language courses.

Rusk himself set the style for language proficiency a week ago when he addressed a German-American banquet audience partly in German.

Also, by calling attention to those who have signed up for language training, officials have put pressure on the other new ambassadors to do the same.

The State Department previously asked Congress for funds to give diplomats annual bonuses for learning any of 33 "hard" languages.

The amount of the bonus would depend on the degree of proficiency, but would range up to $450 for difficult languages such as Russian and Malay; $750 for medium hard languages such as Albanian, Czech and Persian; and $1,050 for real sticklers such as Amharic, Bengali, Kurdish and Tamil.

Canadian Pacific Airlifts Refugees

(Special to the Daily American)

Over 200 European refugees entering Canada under the Federal-Provincial plan for tuberculosis treatment are being airlifted to nine Canadian cities via Canadian Pacific Airlines.

The refugees, from camps in Germany, Austria and Italy will be admitted to Canada as part of the nation's contribution to the World Refugee Program. Under the plan, one member of each family must be a TB patient.

Three CPA Super DC-6B flights are taking part in the airlift. The first aircraft picked up refugees in Rome, Vienna, and Bonn on Feb. 22. The second flight will land refugees at Summerside, Saint John, N.B. and Toronto on March 2. On March 9, the third aircraft will arrive at Winnipeg, Regina, and Vancouver.

Of the 200 refugees being airlifted, 114 are actual TB cases. Under the Federal-Provincial plan, the provinces will pay hospital treatment costs and the federal government will provide accommodation and other assistance.

Relatives of the TB cases will be located as near as possible to the appropriate hospital, for visiting purposes. Arrangements will also be made for these displaced persons to be introduced to Canadians who have the same ethnic origin, to facilitate their integration into the Canadian way of life.
