Infant British Prince Christened Andrew Albert Christian Edward

LONDON, April 8 (AP) — With water from the River Jordan the Archbishop of Canterbury Dr. Geoffrey Fisher today christened Queen Elizabeth II's infant son, Andrew Albert Christian Edward. The first two names were after the grandfathers of the seven-week-old royal Prince.

The last two were for his great-great grandfathers, King Christian IX of Denmark and King Edward VII. Limited to close friends of the Queen and her husband, Prince Philip, the ceremony took place in the private and gold music room on the second floor of Buckingham Palace.

At the Queen's order, no photographs were taken for publication — a distinct departure from custom. But Prince Philip, the child's father, and Antony Armstrong-Jones, a professional photographer who will wed Princess Margaret on May 6, snapped pictures for the royal albums.

Rep. Passman Denies Report Of Unusable Arms For Allies

PARIS, April 8 (AP) — Congressman Otto Passman (D., La.) today flatly denied published reports that the United States was sending unusable and worn-out arms to overseas allies.

In Paris on the last leg of an inspection tour for the House Foreign Operations Appropriations Committee of which he is chairman, Passman said he had never issued any such report, as some reports said.

"I flatly deny that we are dumping unusable or worn-out arms overseas," Passman said.

He had just completed inquiries in Denmark, Norway, Belgium and the Netherlands to gather information on requests for arms and the cost.

"We often get requests which are excessive," said Passman. "I am here to gather information so we can make an intelligent judgment."

"Weapons are always becoming obsolete and the weapons we are sending overseas will also become so in several years time," he said. "However, I have never said one word that the weapons we are sending are obsolete or unusable. Where this report came from I do not know."
