'Visit USA Year' Becomes Reality For Naples Policeman

(Special to the Daily American)

NAPLES, June 24 — The slogan "1960 — Visit USA Year" has become a reality for Naples Traffic Policeman Antonio del Giudice. And all because he wrote a spur-of-the-moment letter to the Reader's Digest.

The complimentary letter, however, was addressed to the author of the Digest's article "Welcome to America" Senator Jacob Javits, sponsor of several bills facilitating tourist travel to the U.S.

Antonio had been trying to visit the U.S. since 1953, the year he couldn't visit America even though he had scraped together $1,300 to do so.

Seemingly endless forms, questionnaires and interviews carried him through most of his allotted vacation time. The sudden illness of his father provided the final blow to Antonio's aspirations.

And in the years since then, constant work—he worked with the group compiling a communications code for the Allied Forces in Italy—seemed to push his hopes to visit the U.S. ever farther away ... until he wrote the letter.

Antonio's reward? Javits, in collaboration with Pan American World Airways invited the Naples traffic officer to spend three weeks in the United States on a good will tour promoting "1960 — Visit USA Year."

He leaves Rome by Pan Am tomorrow and will be met in New York by Senator Javits.

In New York Antonio is scheduled to visit Mayor Robert Wagner and other city officials including the traffic commissioner.

Antonio plans to discuss traffic problems with the commissioner, study the Big City's solutions, visit other American cities with the same purpose in mind.

'Olympic Fever' Worries Romans

By EUGENE LEVIN AP Staff Correspondent

Many Romans are beginning to wonder if the Olympics are worth all the trouble.
For three days over last weekend most of them were without water. For months traffic has been snarled, and the chances are it will get worse before it gets better.

Dizzy With Symbols

For weeks housewives have been eloped in the eyes with Olympic symbols until they're dizzy.

And now many store owners and restaurant keepers are beginning to wonder if the Olympics will really make their cash register ring.

It's not that Italians aren't proud and happy to be hosts to the Summer Games, starting in Rome Aug. 25. The great majority are right proud of it.

Their desire to put on a good show—and avoid any embarrassing predicaments—is at the root of the second thoughts.

For example Rome simply hasn't enough water for its growing population. Olympics or no Olympics, the city had to get a new system. But the Olympics made the city rush things.

Rome faced a possible water shortage at the height of the Games—in torrid August—because of the demands for water at the Olympic Village and the Olympic swimming pools.

So the water company rushed completion of its new plant.

Last weekend all water was turned off for two days while the company switched from the old system to the new one.

The water was off an extra day because of breakdowns in the new system.

As Romans lined up with pails in front of tank trucks, they talked about the water company and the Olympics in less than enthusiastic terms.

ROME HEADS TOWARDS OLYMPICS — Yearlong crash program to prepare roads in Rome for heavy traffic expected during Olympic Games, starting Aug. 25, races toward conclusion. Shows underpass—nearly completed—along Tiber River at "Cavour" crossing. Underpass is part of "Inner Ring" system that city plans to build around heart of Rome.

Traffic Snarls

Automobile traffic is another headache. For months streets have been torn up as city authorities re-paved and widened them, and built underpasses. Officials said Rome's traffic was bad enough, and that the expected Olympic traffic made the repairs a necessary nuisance.

But now, with the Olympics two months off, word is out that traffic will be even worse in August, that as many as a thousand busloads of athletes may move through the city at a time.

This week the experts grappling with the traffic problem launched a new system of one-way streets around Piazza Venezia in central Rome. Traffic was more jammed than ever. Now they plan to modify the one-way streets and experiment some more.

Housewives Complaint

Housewives have complaints too. It's hard to find a shirt for a child without prints of athletes or the five Olympic rings. In food stores this brand of coze and that brand of spaghetti carries the Olympic symbol, claiming to have been officially accepted for Olympic mess halls.

Even the store owners are beginning to wonder. August is normally a big tourist month. But some store owners fear the heavy spending tourists will be driven away from Rome by the Olympic crowds, leaving behind a lower spending tourist bent on devoting all energy and funds to Olympic events rather than shopping.

Restaurants also are worried. Hotels are insisting that their Olympic guests pay for breakfast and one other daily meal in advance. The restaurants figure many tourists are not going to eat out if they mean paying twice for one meal even if the choice is between a beef in a hotel, devilled chicken in a restaurant.
