

Kennedy: 'U.S. Erred In Algerian Policy'

NEW YORK, Feb. 22 (AP) — Sen. John F. Kennedy, declared candidate for the Democratic Party's nomination for President of the United States last night termed the "a tremendous figure" who has dominated the West.

In an extemporaneous speech to a college student press seminar at the Overseas Press Club here, Kennedy said it was a "mistake" for the U.S. government not to have been more active in support of Algerian policy of self-determination.

The Senator noted that the upsurge of nationalism in Latin America, Africa and Asia has caused problems for the U.S. in its relations with its allies, many of whom have interests in those areas. He said that U.S. policy must be content — that it opposes Soviet imperialism in Central Europe.

Other Opinions
The Senator expressed his opinion of certain specific events. He said he would not have defended the Suez Canal area, but said that after the crisis he would have pressed for a firm agreement on the canal; he would have opposed the Baghdad Pact; and he considered the Eisenhower Doctrine fruitless.

chant of "We like Ike" after he had inspected the guard of honor and received formal greetings from Gov. Munoz-Marin.

TV Address

The night before departure, Eisenhower had gone on nationwide television and radio to tell of his "good partners" mission. He also struck back at critics of his defense policy.

He declared America's atomic bomber and missile power "a trustworthy shield of peace" surpassing Russia's ability to destroy by sudden attack.

He termed this "an indestructible force of incalculable power, ample for the day and constantly developing to meet the needs of tomorrow."

He said it enables the United States and its allies — including the Latin nations — to stand resolute in the face of continuous threats.

National Defense

Eisenhower said that America's collective force of bombers, ships, and ballistic missiles sizes up this way: A force not unduly dependent upon any one weapon or any one service; Not subject to elimination by sudden attack; Butressed by an industrial system unmatched on earth, and unhesitatingly supported by a vigorous people determined to remain free.

Strategically, he said, it is far better situated than any force that could be brought to bear against us.

The main aim of the Eisenhower mission southward is to strengthen U.S. relations with Latin America. A frequent Latin complaint is that North Americans don't pay enough attention to their southern neighbors.

In his speech last night Eisenhower was in effect reminding neighbors to the south of the direct benefits they have received from the defense efforts that have been a priority item with the U.S. in recent years.

Diplomats from the nations Eisenhower will visit were on hand at the air field for the send-off. So was Ambassador Guillermo Sevilla-Sacasa of Nicaragua, dean of the Washington diplomatic corps.

Mrs. Eisenhower, however, remained at the White House.

of even the poorest of the Queen's subjects.

"This is a most democratic occasion said the man who will take a special trip to Buckingham Palace to record details of Queen Elizabeth's new baby.

He is a Prince, too — William Prince, deputy superintendent of births, marriages and deaths in the city of Westminster.

The baby Prince's name, to be announced, will be written in the next space available in the register.

The name above it could be the name of the daughter of a duke.

Prince will record the baby's name on the roll, his names are likely to be about four — and names of his father and mother and father's occupation. The register will sign it.

Then Prince will take the baby back to his headquarters at Caxton Hall, the building known for its record of famous marriages.
