LEND ME YOUR EARS:

Frankie Laine To Give Two Concerts In Rome

FRANCESCO LO VECCHIO will arrive in Rome today. You might not think that a very interesting piece of information, but it is — when you realize that Frankie Laine, the famed American crooner who prefers the sunny side of the street and wants to go where the wild geese go, is of Italian origin and is proud of the 48 Frankie Laine Fan Clubs in Italy, will give two concerts here — at the Teatro Adriano, at 5:30 and 9:30 p.m. Friday. After that he is off to London for a fortnight.

Here & There

If Mrs. Vella Leacacos seems a bit preoccupied these days, she has reason for it. The busy wife of the Cleveland Plain Dealer's John Leacacos is organizing a "Home-Get-Together" for military personnel and civilians from the Greater Cleveland area who are serving in the Greater Munich district in Germany. The jamboree will take place in Munich on Sunday, June 9, in Amerika Haus on the Karolinenplatz in Munich, and the R.S.V.P.s are being handled by Miss Mary Burke at the American Consulate in the Bavarian capital. The Cleveland Plain Dealer and the Cleveland News are picking up the tab... the young Italian athletes who make up the Rome Senators baseball team were so downcast over what they described as their "poor showing" last Sunday that they didn't think they deserved to be invited to tomorrow's American Club luncheon. We hope they'll get even a greater hand for their humility... in addition to the Boy Scouts awards previously announced by the Daily America, Dean Gibbons won a Life Scout badge at last Saturday's court of honor at which Ambassador Zellerbach handed out the insignia and merit badges. Scout Activities awards for the year, honoring those boys who earned the most points for attendance, participation in activities and progress, went to six youngsters. In the eight category they were Bud Miller, first; Alan Posner, second; and Dean Gibbons, third. For the under 14 group, Dennis Martin, first; Greg Hoffman, second; and Bill Miller, third. Rome's troop is sponsored by the American Embassy.

Exits & Entrances

Mrs. Walter McAdoo has gone back to the States for a visit with her family, but will be returning soon to Rome and her husband. Longtime Rome resident artist Tom Freeman locked up his studio apartment on the Via Principessa Clotilda and flew off to the U.S. yesterday. Slew whisked N.Y. production chief of Paramount, William Holden home by way of Copenhagen... a notable group of newsmen, all of whom flew across the Atlantic on TWA's inaugural New York-Paris jet flight last weekend, have flown into Rome (also by jet). They include columnist Leonard Lyons, James Leavelle of the Wichita Eagle, Danton Walker of the New York Daily News, Boyd Lewis of NEA (with Mrs. Lewis), Keith Saunders of American Aviation magazine... TWA also took Msgr. John Patrick Carroll-Abbing, founder of Italy's Boys Towns, to Geneva.

Corso Carousel

Tunisian Ambassador and Mrs. Moudher Ben Ammar attended the vernissage of 11 artists of Tunisia at the Feluca Gallery on Via Frattina — the first Tunisian art show since the independence of that nation and especially ordered by the Tunisian government. This will be the last Feluca exhibit of the season, gallery director Derna Querel announces. It runs through June 30... another interesting exhibit opens at the Exposition Palace this afternoon at 6. It's a show of painting and sculpture by artists of the Rome institutes and academies of the following countries: the U.S., Austria, Belgium, Britain, Egypt, France, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland. American soprano Elena Doria will sing Violetta tonight in the Teatro Eliseo's first performance this spring of "La Traviata". Polynesian dancer Colleen Bennett flew yesterday to Paris, but she'll be back in Italy in September, her manager Tony Movinhan says, to appear in a musical staged by Italian director Remigio Paoletti. All young ladies with beauty problems should keep up at the news that Elia with Ar-She'll be stopping for a few days at the Grand.

LEND ME YOUR EARS:

Brazil Artist, In Italy Since '99, Exhibits Here

FIFTY-EIGHT YEARS AGO a young Brazilian artist, Augusto Luiz de Freitas, came to Rome on a scholarship won at the Academy of Fine Arts in Rio de Janeiro. It was 1899 and eternity was about to record another century.

De Freitas fell in love with Italy, and in 1902 moved to the Lazio town of Anticoli Corrado, near Rome, where he lived for the rest of his life. He never went home.

On Tuesday night of this week, de Freitas came up from his beloved village to attend the formal opening of his one-man show at the Palazzo Mattei, 31 Via del Funiari, which will continue through June 22. Whitecapped with sharp features, he moved through the mixture of diplomats and artists at the opening with elegance and complete ease.

He recalled his early days in Anticoli Corrado, where the aristocratic models were lush girls of Surcouf descent, who in the days of Keats and Shelley used to come up to Rome to sell violets at the Spanish steps — and occasionally pose for the artists on Via Margutta.

FAO In Spain

In the mountains 30 miles from Madrid lies the Escorial, a palace and monastery built in the 16th century by King Philip II of Spain in honor of St. Lawrence. A huge structure, it has been since that time the resting place of Spain's kings and queens. Although in recent years the area has become a summer resort for Madrid's well-to-do, it still retains much of the peaceful charm of ancient Spain.

Last Sunday about 130 delegates and secretariat staff members of FAO, visiting from Rome, after a week of probing into the proper use of the new world, in agricultural terms, spent several hours wandering through this monument to the old. As guests of the Spanish government, they visited the tombs and saw the frescoes with which the Spaniards have honored their rulers. Afterwards they went in buses to a country inn, well off the road, where they saw the traditional Fiesta Campana — the country festival at which peasants are their mettle as they paces to test the bull rings. They joined in the Spanish equivalent of a jam session, joining flamenco dancers in the dances born of the country.

Earlier in the week, FAO Director General R. H. Sen and senior members of his staff, along with delegates, were entertained in the gardens of the Instituto Nacional de Investigaciones Agronomicas, the building that has been turned over to FAO for the 26th session of its council by Miguel Echegaray, founder and president of the institute.

Genoa Hospital

On Saturday, the International Hospital in Salita San Rocco, Genoa, celebrated the first centenary of its foundation. To mark this memorable day, a garden party was held in the hospital grounds, attended by well over 500 people, including the prefect, the mayor and the consular authorities, as well as many of the ladies of the Genoa foreign colony who devote much of their spare time to the welfare of the patients.

The Rev. Beronelli, Swiss pastor, gave a short commemorative speech, and messages were read from the English, Scottish, Valaisian, Swiss and German churches, as well as from the Italian and French consulates.

The first location of the hospital was in Salita San Gerolamo, when during 1857 its capacity was only eleven beds. Until 1871, the hospital was reserved only to patients of the Protestant faith, but after that date all creeds were received to the extent that today Italian patients greatly outnumber foreigners. Today there are 60 beds, and in the maternity ward alone, 214 babies were born during 1956.

Chigi Chit-Chat

Noted Italian architect Pier Luigi Nervi was made a member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters Tuesday at a ceremony in U.S. Ambassador James D. Zellerbach's office. Among Nervi's most famous constructions are the Sports Stadium of Florence and the Exhibition Hall of Turin, where Italy's annual automobile show is held.

His date all creeds were received to the extent that today Italian patients greatly outnumber foreigners. Today there are 60 beds, and in the maternity ward alone, 214 babies were born during 1956.

3 Top Cardinals Arrive At Vatican

VATICAN CITY, June 12 (UP) — Three of Italy's top provincial cardinals arrived almost simultaneously in Rome yesterday but Vatican sources said there was "nothing significant" in the visits.

The cardinals were Giacomo Leroto, archbishop of Bologna, Ernesto Ruffini, archbishop of Palermo, and Giuseppe Roncalli, patriarch of Venice. All three are high on the list of possible eventual successors to Pope Pius XII.

A high Vatican source said they came to Rome on routine church business and it was "pure coincidence" that they arrived on the same day.
