Clark Heads Boys Town Fund Affair

Tiber tid-bits: Gen. Mark Clark, whose 5th Army landed at Salerno and remained in Italy until the shooting stopped in World War II, has been named honorary chairman of the Boys Towns of Italy. Msgr. John P. Carroll-Abbing, the Irish priest who founded various parts of the peninsula, will be special honor guest at the dinner, general chairman of which is George M. Bragallini, treasurer of New York City. . . . the only person who got to see Lauren Bacall's nightie at that Frankfurt March of Dimes benefit the other night was the anonymous GI who bought the closed box in which swashbuckling film star Errol Flynn had to auction it off. Army brass, at the last minute, decided the original plan to have Flynn wave the nightie gently from the auctioneer's platform in an effort to run up the bidding was a bit undignified. The film's garment was carefully wrapped and tied up in a box and labeled "mystery package." Flynn, his actress wife, Pat Wymore and actress Olga San Juan helped raise about $5,000 for the March of Dimes campaign. . . . Cecil McGivern, controller of BBC's television programs, flew back to London via BEA after a week of visits to RAI vide installations in Milan and Rome with an eye on the future exchange of British and Italian programs. . . . Japanese actress Laya Rukly left Rome for London, after a brief holiday in the Eternal City. She'll go on from the British capital to Australia to make a picture with Jack Hawkins. . . . TWA brought Irene Brin, European representative of Harper's Bazaar, back from the Paris style showings, with her husband, Gasparo Dal Corso, proprietor of Rome's Obelisco art gallery. . . . Maria Riva, Marlene's little girl, opened with Sir Cedric Hardwicke in "The Burning Glass" at Hartford, Conn. . . . actor Jose Ferrer and his songbird wife, Rosemary Clooney, moved from London to Paris on their European holiday. Getting closer all the time. . . . the wine village of Frascati, flung up against the Alban Hills just south of Rome, is going all out for carnival this season. The big blow-off will be mardi gras on March 2, but festivities will begin Feb. 14, and continue on Feb. 21, 22 and 28. . . . and yesterday's sunning brought with it the first hint of Roman spring.

Gen. MARK CLARK
... helps Italy again

German soprano, is starring these days in two productions at Milan's La Scala Theater—Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" (dates: Feb. 9, 14 and 20) and Gounod's "Faust" (dates: Feb. 12, 16, 18, 21 and 24). Herbert von Karayan is conductor of the Mozart opera, and Artur Rodzinski that of "Faust."

Hypnotism Helps London Typist Land Boy Friend

LONDON, Feb. 6 (AP)—How a girl who considered herself an "ugly duckling" developed poise—and found a boy friend—through hypnotism was told today in the British Journal of Medical Hypnotism.

The 25-year-old typist worried because she thought herself too tall, too round-shouldered, too undeveloped in figure, and wore glasses.

A doctor gave her confidence by telling her during "waking hypnotism" that mannequins are tall; that artificial aids help the figure; that contact lenses do away with glasses; that she should walk confidently and become fashionable and get a good hair-do, too. "The patient felt for the first time that life might be really worth while," Dr. S. J. Van Pelt, president of the society, wrote in the journal in telling the story. "Soon she joined a tennis club, learned to dance and acquired a boy friend."

THE STAGE

Wanda Osiris, Macario Enliven 'Made In Italy'

After an extended tryout tour, Made In Italy, the newest musical revue, has reached the capital and gaily installed itself at the spacious Sistina Palace Theater.

Starred in it are the blonde and charming veteran trouper Wanda Osiris, "the lady with class," and versatile comic Macario, a sort of Junior Italian Ed Wynn. Wanda's suave elegance and Macario's goofy mimicry provide the antipodes from which emanates the spark of humor that injects buoyancy to the whole show. These two popular performers, however, are slightly handicapped by some less than brilliant sketches. Most of these could stand a little more pungency and pruning.

Other performers who met with the audience's wholehearted approval are statuesque Dorian Gray (that name sounds familiar), and Michael, an expert juggler. Lots of applause was spontaneously accorded to the beautiful Bluebell Blondes and their partners, the Bluebell Rouges. Together they cut a lively, harmonious and attractive picture within Solaris' choreographic arrangements. Folco's dazzling costumes and Garret-to-Pompeii's original sets, including an imaginative reproduction of the "Spanish Steps" of Piazza di Spagna. The musical arrangements are contributed by G. Kramer.

It is quite all right to take Made In Italy as light entertainment, escape, diversion; but the product as a whole is definitely not for export, it standing to topnotch musical revues as vermouth does to bourbon.

Italy Says 'Ciao' To Soviet Envoy

The anti-Communist Italian government threw a polite farewell luncheon yesterday for Mikhail Kostikov, recalled ambassador of Soviet Russia.

The host was Attilio Piccioni, foreign minister in the short-lived cabinet of Amintore Fanfani. Even in Christian Democrat circles, Piccioni is known as something of a right-winger.

The guest of honor is reported to have been a friend of Lavrenti Beria, executed chief of the Soviet secret police. He is going home next Tuesday.

Eggshell Trail

LAS CRUCES, N.M., Feb. 6 (AP)—A thief stole 12 dozen eggs from a farm near Las Cruces. Police followed his tracks and found a heap of shells and the 12 cartons. There was no sign any eggs had been spilled. They're looking for a man who could hold a 144-egg omelet.

Where To Dine

Guide To Roman Restaurants

By JOHN HOBART

Food, like music, possesses to a remarkable degree the power of stirring the memory. Proust found that out when he dipped that cookie, or whatever it was, into a cup of tea and the taste brought back such a remembrance of things past that seven huge volumes were required to record it. Now it is quite possible that, even here in Rome, you may dream occasionally of those happy, happy, far-off days in Paris. If this nostalgic mood seizes you, you are advised to go to Le Caveau Parisien, located in the Hotel Marini on Via Tritone, where the cuisine is calculated to sharpen all your pleasantest memories of La Ville Lumiere. One bite of the canard à l'orange, is enough to transport you back to Paris; one mouthful of the chateaubriant, and you are standing again on the Pont Royal, looking toward Notre Dame through the blue dusk, or perhaps you are dodging taxis on the Place de la Concorde. Ah, Paris, Paris!

Le Caveau, which has been in operation for three years, claims it's the only French restaurant in Rome. Although a few concessions are made on the menu to the Italian palate, as spaghetti à la napoletana, nouilles étiées Caruso and pizza parisienne, the main purpose of the place is to provide a cuisine that is authentically French. Le Caveau's maître d'hôtel, Mario Berni, and the chef are both Italian, but both have worked in France and know all there is to know about that subtle Gallic preparations as filet de sole Bonne Femme. (Incidentally, Parisian "atmosphere" counts for little in this arched basement. There's a terrific mural showing the Eiffel Tower, but that's about all. It's the food that matters.)

Perhaps you will start your meal with the paté de foie gras de Strasbourg or the filet de sole dioupoise, which is cooked in cream, mushrooms and shrimps, or the quiche Lorraine, a kind of soufle with cheese and bacon. But it is well to save room for one of the two major specialties that Le Caveau offers as a main course—a superb chateaubriant with sauce béarnaise or the miraculous canard à l'orange. This is the point where the Parisian memories start flooding in.

Indeed the canard is worth a paragraph of its own. Louis de Gouy, the great cookbook man, has pointed out that the Théniers knew sprinkled it with the wine of Chlo; in Rome, with the white truffles of Libya. But they didn't know about duck with oranges, which was too bad. It took the chefs of France to discover that the taste of roasted duck blends supremely with that of the peeled orange, though by what happy accident he neglects to say. At any rate, Le Caveau's duck—which is de-boned for you by the waiter at your table—is something to know about. There is a wide divergence among duck authorities about where the most edible of these birds come from: Le Caveau imports its ducks neither from France nor Long Island, but from Lake Fogliano, near Genzano, a few miles south of Rome.

Do you want, for the end of dinner, something very rich, very special and very French? Then try the bananes flambées. They are presented with much courtly ceremony—a chafing-dish; butter; sugar that becomes "caramelized," as cooks say; additions of cognac and rum; paper-thin suzettes; and finally two bananas, which get wrapped up in the suzettes and soaked in the other ingredients. "Merveilleux" is almost too mild a word to describe them.
