Nevada Bookies Face Dilemma -- Election Betting Is Against Law

CARSON CITY, Nev., Nov. 4 (AP) — News of a forgotten state law against election bets has thrown Nevada bookmakers into confusion — and stopped wagers on the presidential race.

The biggest question: What to do with all the money already bet on Democrat John Kennedy and Republican Richard Nixon? While Nevada has legalized just about all forms of gambling, a 1919 law bans any type of bet on any election.

"I quit!" was the response of a Reno odds-maker. He promptly pulled down all signs quoting election odds.

In Las Vegas, all eight race books erased their odds before a news story about the forgotten law hit the streets.

Attorney General Roger Foley said the law was a problem for local authorities. Gaming Control Board Chairman Ray Abbatichio agreed.

Bookies disagreed on what to do with the bets they hold.

"We're going to pay the winners and collect from the losers," one said. "That's the only way to do it."

"I don't see how we could go ahead," said another. "If a man lost his money and discovered the bet was illegal he'd try to get it back."

As the bookies closed election operations, the odds were still 8 to 3 for Kennedy and 6 to 5 for Nixon.

Rome USIS Plans Election Night Open House

United States Information Service offices in Rome will become election headquarters — non-partisan, of course — for the American community here next Tuesday night.

From 11 p.m. on, volunteers who have been recruited throughout the community will join the USIS staff in tabulating returns.

Visitors to the USIS building at 2 Via Boncompagni will be able to follow the vote count in the U.S. election minute-by-minute as reports are received from the United States via teletype and radio.

Open House

The open house will continue until the presidential, senatorial and gubernatorial races are decided and the party composition of the next House of Representatives is known.

American press organizations, including the Rome Daily American, are cooperating with USIS to provide the fast reporting, atmosphere and excitement traditional to an election night vigil in the United States.

The Associated Press and United Press International have undertaken to install their services for the occasion, so that participants in the open house can read their election reports moment by moment as the teletypes click them out.

The United States Information Agency's reports also will be received from Washington via radio-teletype.

Primary source of radio news will be Voice of America broadcasts in English from Washington, "piped" to the USIS building by cable from special receiving facilities. Armed Forces Network broadcasts from European points also will be monitored.

Rome Daily American tally sheets will be supplied to those who wish to keep an individual record of presidential returns as well as follow election trends on large bulletin boards which will be kept current by volunteer workers.

Coffee and doughnuts will fuel volunteers and guests through the early morning hours, providing an additional touch of American tradition.

Entrance lobby and first-floor offices will be decorated with bunting, election posters of both parties, and photographs of both presidential candidates.

Nerve center of the operation will be an "election news desk" where teletype and radio reports will be processed before they go to the workers at the bulletin boards in a large adjacent room. The boards will show, state by state and race by race, the latest returns.

For those who cannot drop in on the open house at USIS, following are the frequencies on which the Voice of America, beginning at 2 a.m. Wednesday, will beam continuous English-language election broadcasts toward Italy:

De Gaulle Threatens New Powers

PARIS, Nov. 5 (AP) — President Charles de Gaulle's threat to use his broad constitutional powers to lead outcries from politicians and and radio address last night said in words that indicated he has decided on a new course for Algeria that, "This course no longer leads to an Algeria governed by metropolitan France, but to an Algerian Algeria . . . in the end responsibility for Algerian affairs, at every level, will be assumed by Algerians."

Invoke Powers

To achieve this end De Gaulle threatened to invoke the considerable powers granted him by the constitution if he decides "there is an immediate and grave threat" to the nation.

And the President indicated that if extremists continue to oppose him he would dissolve Parliament and call a national referendum to uphold his policies.

De Gaulle's speech revealed that he no longer believes—if he ever did—that Algeria can remain permanently under the complete control of metropolitan France.

In his previous offer of self-determination which still stands De Gaulle offered Algerians three choices — union with France, local autonomy, or independence. Last night's speech indicates that he no longer believes the first of these three choices possible or practical.

This attitude predictably outraged extreme rightists who want to keep Algeria French at all costs. Thundered the National Front for a French Algeria in a communique following the speech. "No power and no man has the right to decree the abandonment of a province of France."

Noisy Demonstrators

Algiers remained calm last night but noisy demonstrators organized a horn-toting motorcade through the streets of Oran in western Algeria that was finally broken up by police as it converged on the Oran prefecture.

Sources close to the rebel government repeated the established rebel view that the French government ended what chaos was for a negotiated peace by imposing impossible conditions for cease-fire talks.

President Charles de Gaulle's threat to use his broad constitutional powers to lead outcries from politicians and and radio address last night said in words that indicated he has decided on a new course for Algeria that, "This course no longer leads to an Algeria governed by metropolitan France, but to an Algerian Algeria . . . in the end responsibility for Algerian affairs, at every level, will be assumed by Algerians."

East Germans Claim Authority For Traffic In, Out Of Berlin

BERLIN, Nov. 5 (AP) — The East German Communists declared today that they alone can decide what goods and people move in and out of West Berlin.

This statement was made by the Communist Party daily Neues Deutschland in a commentary on the seizure of a consignment of radio equipment made in West Berlin. As it was destined for the West German border police the Communist customs declared it contraband war material.

Neues Deutschland said: "To remove all misunderstanding: We and nobody else decide what is allowed on the territory of the (East) German Democratic Republic."

"Weeds Of Fascism"

"We will not allow the weeds of fascism to flourish in West Berlin and revenge seekers will not travel over our roads. We hold ourselves strictly to the Potsdam Agreement and war equipment will not roll over our territory."

Recently the Communists have not halted supplies coming to Berlin. But they are now beginning to tighten their controls on goods shipped out.

Their first step has been to confiscate a consignment of radio telephones made in West Berlin and shipped out by truck.

Their explanation: The equipment was destined for the West German border police, that made it "war material" prohibited in Germany by the victors of World War II. Yesterday, another truckload of radio equipment was halted by the Communists.

West Berlin produces large quantities of radio apparatus of all kinds. Because of the large element of skilled labor and the relatively small amount of raw material required, the electronics industry is peculiarly suited to the city's odd situation. It has recently been the most successful element in a record total of exports.

If the Communists prevent shipment of its product, the city's trade will suffer seriously. Their next step might be to find other excuses to stop other goods, both going out of and coming into the isolated city.

UK Reveals V-Bomber Force As Additional War Deterrent

LONDON, Nov. 5 (UPI) — Britain announced yesterday its jet V-bomber force "is in instant readiness, and each V-bomber can carry several scores of Hiroshimas."

Defense Minister Harold Watkinson, making the announcement in the House of Commons during a heated defense of America's new Polaris submarine base in Scotland, said:

"I say this as a threat to no one, but only that the facts should be known. The V-bomber fleet is a valid contribution to the deterrent (of war), certainly until the mid-1960s."

"It will gradually have an increasing stand-off capacity because of the coming into service of the British stand-off missile called Blue Steel."

Watkinson, defending Prime Minister Harold Macmillan's position that he will not be snubbed by the U.S. in consultation on rocket firings, emphasized England's own power by saying:

"Very Powerful"

"At this moment we have a very powerful V-bomber force."

Watkinson's appearance came after attacks by left-wingers in the opposition Labour Party against Macmillan's announcement Tuesday that the Polaris base would be established north of Glasgow in February.

Watkinson reaffirmed Macmillan's statement that Britain would have the "fullest possible consultation" before rocket firings, but he conceded:

"It is obvious that consultation might just be impracticable. This is what the Prime Minister meant." In Washington, the U.S. Navy said yesterday that it never had any thought of launching Polaris missiles from submarines anchored in British territorial waters, AP reported.

An official made this comment in supporting the statement made by Watkinson who told the House of Commons:

"Our control within territorial waters is absolute, and we have a firm assurance that these missiles would not be fired in any circumstances in United Kingdom territorial waters."

Fisher Sees 'New Relationship' Between Anglicans, Catholics

CANTERBURY, England, Nov. 5 (AP) — The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, said today his proposed visit to the Vatican next month has already established a new relationship between Anglicans and Roman Catholics.

Fisher, titular head of the Anglican Church, told a diocesan conference his planned talks with Pope John in Rome have shown that in future people of the two faiths can talk together "freely and openly in a spirit of Christian friendship — not seeking victory over one another, but as fellow disciples."

The Archbishop, whose rank in the church is below only that of the Queen, spoke of breaking down of barriers between the two churches.

In a recent letter to his congregation, he said, he had found it necessary to say that churchmen must press on with their friendly relations "not only with the free churches but even with Roman Catholics."

It was then necessary to say "even" because between the Roman Catholic Church and Anglicans there were "great barriers of doctrine and doctrinal practice, some of them having grave political and social consequences in this and other lands," the Archbishop said.

And he went on: "But as I wrote it, I knew the day was coming when it would be no more necessary to say 'even.'"

"And the day has come." Fisher told the church leaders it had been said that any previous Pope would have welcomed any previous Archbishop of Canterbury if he had asked to be received in Rome.

"Even if that is true," Fisher said, "it misses the point."

"No previous Archbishop could have proposed such a visit as this without the certainty of insuperable misunderstandings."

"The fact that I could do so is due to a steadily changing climate of thought among all churches, and finally to the initiative openly taken by the Pope to make clear that the Roman Catholic Church desired better relations with the other churches and not least and expressly with the Church of England and its sister churches."

"I knew that the proposal was already a welcome one before I made it."

FBI Captures 'Big One'

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5 (UPI) — The FBI announced today it had captured Robert William Schultz, a revenge-crazed bank robber, listed as one of the nation's ten most wanted criminals.

Mint-Flavored Smog In UK . . . Thanks To Advertising

SOUTH SHIELDS, England, Nov. 5 (AP) — Mint-flavored smog wafted through this northern industrial town today.

The town's local newspaper, the Shields Gazette, had printed Britain's first-ever "smelly" advertisement.

The advertisement was for a brand of canned peas "with the mint flavor."

It was printed in green ink with a special mint aroma ingredient.

The hint of mint filled the printing rooms and wafted out into the streets.

Alec Moir, managing director of the paper, wasn't sure the experiment was a success.

"The smell might render the newspaper objectionable in the home where it might come into contact with food," he said. "There are such things to be considered before any idea of this kind is extended."
