H-Pilot Set To Ditch Bomb Reds

ter is not genuine and that it's a fake."

In Washington, U.S. military sources dismissed the letter as poor propaganda.

The Defense Department had no official comment, but authorities in private viewed the Soviet story as obvious propaganda.

The letter, which was in hand-printing, identified the author as someone who listened to Radio Moscow broadcasts and was certain that "scouter or later capitalism will die out."

Ask Financial Aid

The letter said the author and his fellow crew members expected Russia to provide them "financial aid for the rest of our lives" and asked Malik to make sure that Russian anti-aircraft batteries did not shoot them down when they approached the borders to seek refuge.

The letter charged U.S. Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and other NATO leaders of having "turned their backs on the good will extended to them by the Russians."

"I can help your country a great deal and it's my firm intention to do so soon. Enough water has passed under the bridge and it's time to act," the letter said.

"It's my contention that the Western world should be shown the how horrible an atomic war could be . . ."

My Target . . .

"I intend to drop my deadly load during one of our routine flights. My target will be some point in the North Sea, not very far from the coast of England but far enough so that too many people won't be killed. Our D-day will be sometime after July the first."

"May this one bomb stop those persons who want to drop hundreds of them."

The first report by the Russians that they had such a letter came at midday today when Malik mentioned it at a lunch given by the Paternosters Club, an organization of book publishers and editors.

If the U.S. does not promise to halt nuclear tests immediately . . .

Scientists of the U.S., Britain, France and Canada met for nearly four hours to complete the plan which they presumably will submit to the Russians tomorrow.

Just before the conference met, Moscow piled on pressure to get the U.S. to suspend tests at once. Today the Reds revived their campaign in anti-Western articles in the Soviet government organ Izvestia and in Unità, official organ of the Italian Communists.

The Italian red organ indicated bluntly in a dispatch from its Geneva correspondent that the Soviet delegation would not sit around here indefinitely if the West continues refusing to halt nuclear tests.
