BOEING FLIGHT LINE reflects 707 production tempo. Indicative of increasing tempo of jetliner production is this scene at Boeing Transport Division pre-flight line at Renton, Wash., Municipal Airport. The 600 miles-an-hour 707 yet transports being made ready for first flight are for Trans World Airlines, American Airlines and Qantas of Australia. More than 35 of the big 707s already have been rolled from factory and some now are in service with Pan American, American and TWA. National Airlines also operates 707s under lease from Pan American on New York-Florida route. Boeing jets for Continental Airlines, BOAC and U. S. Air Force Military Air Transport Service also have been rolled from Transport Division plant. Total of 190 Boeing jets, of 707 and 720 types, are now on order or delivered.

'Weirdies' Are Women -- But Stone Age Type

LONDON, April 17 (AP) — "Weirdies" are girls — but sometimes you'd never guess it. They're part of London's latest fashion craze—the uncombed, unkempt cave-woman look. "Weirdies" try to look different. They say they're aloof from the frothy color of fashionable clothes.

It started in the teenage student set in Chelsea, London's arty-crafty sector.

It's a craze for weird getups that give girls something of the primitive disarray of prehistoric cave-women.

You see them in cosmopolitan King's Road of Chelsea, scuffling along in sneaker shoes, shapeless black duffle coats, sloppy sweaters and tight skirts, or in black leather topcoats, black sweaters, and black stockings — with a darn at the heel.

No lipstick. Heavy eye makeup. Hair uncombed-looking.

Well, maybe it is combed, only it doesn't look it. Usually it's left to grow long and lank around the neck, falling down over the shoulders, getting in the eyes.

Keeps Individuality

"In looking different," said "Weirdie" Margaret Smith, 18-year-old student, "I keep my individuality."

This is the philosophy of the "weirdies." But partly it is economics.

Said Miss Smith, who is not really weird but actually rather attractive: "I can't afford to go to Norman Hartnell (Queen Elizabeth's dressmaker) and if I go to a chain store to buy dresses I'll only look like every other office girl. So I strike out on my own."

"Weirdie" Janet Brown is 17, a student, and pretty.

She objects to being called weird. "I may not look smart," she said, with some understatement, but I don't think I'm dowdy.

"I feel these clothes are 'me' at the moment."

Capsule Searchers Scour Polar Wastes

WASHINGTON, April 17 (UPI) — The Air Force said today an aerial search is under way over the vast top-of-the-world Arctic wastes for the space capsule ejected from the Discoverer II satellite.

It said the search is being conducted in the Spitzbergen area just north of the Arctic Circle with the approval and cooperation of the Norwegian government.

The Air Force said the search was being conducted by U.S. planes. A spokesman said he did not know whether surface vessels also were involved.

The Vandenberg, Calif., Air Force base had reported earlier that the searching planes would use "foreign bases" if necessary and if possible.

which 14 and 15 year old girls danced in the nude.

Many famous names have been dragged into the scandal, which first broke shortly before Christmas. The new press laws, however, have prevented normally freewheeling Paris newspapers from discussing the affair in great detail, and in recent weeks it has largely dropped from sight.

Following Le Troquer's examination in the closely guarded judge's chambers at the Justice Palace yesterday, however, there were reports of further developments.

Three policemen, involved in the investigation of the case in its early stages, were reported about to be arrested. The charges to be brought against them were not known, however.
