

Adenauer's Long Road To Triumph

By T. W. WILLIAMS

Chancellor KONRAD ADENAUER

Konrad Adenauer who Sunday led the German Christian Democrats to an electoral triumph unprecedented in German history has travelled a long road during his over 81 years. His grandfather was the owner of a small bakery in Bonn — now the capital of West Germany. His father worked as a farm hand as a youth and later in a brick factory owned by relatives before joining the army to qualify for a job in the civil service.

His Father
Shortly afterwards his father fought in Bismarck's war against the Austrians and took part — as an enlisted man — in the decisive battle of Koenigsgratz. Seriously wounded, he was rescued from under a pile of dead and wounded where he was found clutching the bottom of an Austrian flagstaff. For his bravery he was given a commission — an unusual tribute. Only one other private was promoted from the ranks during the war.

Returning home to marry Helene Scharenberg, the daughter of a Cologne bank clerk, he faced a strange predicament. Either the girl's father provided a dowry for him as an officer in the Prussian army — or he, Adenauer, would not be permitted to marry Helene. As his father-in-law-to-be could not afford the dowry, Adenauer resigned from the army and got employment as a court clerk, a position considered far below that of an army officer.

Law And Italy

The family remained poor. Young Konrad, a third son, went to work in a bank at 18 — his two elder brothers' education had exhausted his father's savings. But he succeeded in winning a scholarship grant from a Cologne foundation and soon went on to Freiburg University where he studied law. Later he transferred to the University of Munich. During holidays he even managed to visit Switzerland, Venice, Florence, Ravenna and Assisi — largely on foot, with many nights spent in haylofts.

In 1901, at 24, he passed his "assessors' exam in Berlin, qualifying as an "assistant judge." Shortly afterwards he started work in Cologne's State Prosecutor's (district attorney) office. Two years later he joined one of the city's leading law firms. After becoming an assistant judge in Cologne's District Court, he married into an old Rhish family and soon was in the midst of politics.

One day, during World War I he barely survived an automobile accident. A witness described the incident thus:

Face Changed
"There was a fearful crash, as though a shell had hit the pavement. The car was just a mass of twisted metal. Then slowly a man came crawling out from under it, straightened himself up, and streaming with blood, walked away, stiff like a puppet. That was Herr Adenauer."

He survived, but his face was completely changed — into the face familiar to the world today, something that reminds reporters of a distinguished old Red Indian chief. After four months in the hospital he was back at work, and in 1917, following the death of the incumbent, was elected Lord Mayor.

No Work Under Nazis

Adenauer continued as Mayor until 1933 when Adolf Hitler had him removed. Throughout the Nazi period he was unable to work. At one critical point, D. N. Heinemann of Greenwich, Conn., an American industrialist, gave him the funds he needed to support his family. At other times he took refuge in the famous monastery of Maria Laach, the abbey of which was an old schoolmate. Later still, in 1944 after the famous July plot on Hitler's life, he was arrested by the Gestapo and escaped, only to be caught again.

Fired By British

When the Allies captured Cologne, the Americans appointed him back to his old job — Lord Mayor. But on October 6, 1945, only a few months later, the British Military Government removed him and banished him from Cologne for "incompetence." This proved to be a benefit in disguise, for it freed him from a daily routine of about 16 or 18 hours, and permitted him to move throughout West Germany to found and organize the Christian Democratic (CDU) party.

Less than four years later, on September 14, 1949, the first West German elections were held. Adenauer's CDU licked the Socialists pollsters had selected as the favorites. On September 17, Adenauer became the Chancellor of the new Germany.

Four years later he led his party to an even greater victory in the September 1953 elections — and this time, still ramrod straight, still a lucid and aggressive speaker, he has done it again and won an even greater margin of popular support.

Finland Devalues To Recoup In West

HELSINKI, Sept. 16 (AP)—Finland has devalued its currency by almost forty per cent in a desperate attempt to recover Western foreign markets.

The official rate of 231 Finnmarks to the U.S. dollar was hiked to 320. The old tourist rate was abolished.

The Russians and the British have been Finland's biggest customers. Britain had 21.6 percent of Finland's export trade last year but this fell to only 16 per cent in the first six months of 1957. British exports to Finland increased to 18,240,000 Finnmarks this year from 14,730,000 Finnmarks for a similar period in 1956.

The USSR has moved up meantime and under a new trade agreement will become Finland's number one customer, authorities said. Russians exported 18,051,000 Finnmarks worth of goods to Finland this year, an increase of three percent and imported 16,020,000 worth, about the same as last year.

Two Days More For Series Contest

Only two days left to win that free Pan American Clipper trip in the Daily American's 1957 World Series Contest. Fill in your entry blank today and drop it in the mail without delay.

The American League's champion New York Yankees continued to be the favorites to win the Series as entries poured in to the Daily American office yesterday.

But they are no longer holding to their previously-established 3-1 margin. This was in part due to a heavy batch of returns from Saudi Arabia, most of which favored the Milwaukee Braves. Returns from Tehran, Istanbul, Athens, Beirut and Alexandria showed the Yankees favored nearly 4-1 though.

ed the Milwaukee Braves. Returns from Tehran, Istanbul, Athens, Beirut and Alexandria showed the Yankees favored nearly 4-1 though.

Returns from Southern Italy were running 50-50 between the Yankees and the Braves. A number of readers formerly from Boston said they were sticking to the Yankees as old friends despite the shift to Milwaukee. C's seemed to favor the Yankees at a steady 3-1 rate.

The Series begins in Yankee Stadium next Wednesday. The first team to win four games in the seven-game series will capture the championship.

The Daily American's contest will close at 6 p.m., Monday, Sept. 30. The official entry blank will appear for the last time in the editions of Sunday, Sept. 29. All entries should be mailed to BASEBALL, Rome Daily American, Via Dandolo 8, Rome, Italy. Entries from outside Italy, postmarked no later than Sept. 30, will be accepted as they arrive in Rome.

LEND ME YOUR EARS:

Hungarian Lad Helped
By Roman Good Will

THE HEART-WARMING STORY of a handicapped Hungarian boy and the Roman residents who collaborated in helping him has just come to light. He is Gyorgy Bodocsi, son of Ilona Bodocsi, a Hungarian woman whose husband was killed by the Russians as he tried to escape from a train that was deporting him and his family to Russia.

Mrs. Bodocsi and her three-year-old daughter managed to get away and to come to Italy as refugees. In a Bologna refugee camp Gyorgy was born — with a harelip. Because of the child's physical imperfection, immigration authorities refused to give Mrs. Bodocsi and her family permission to emigrate to Australia, the land she had chosen for her new life.

And here starts the chain reaction. Hungarian newspaperwoman Mrs. Susan Vadnai heard of the case, spoke of it to Vernon Jarrett, genial proprietor of George's Restaurant. Jarrett offered to help, mentioned the case to Prof. Franco Stipa, a Rome plastic surgeon. Two weeks ago Stipa operated on little Gyorgy free of charge.

Today it seems that the operation is a big success. And Mrs. Bodocsi's trip with her family to Australia now seems likely to become a reality.

Also on hand were author W. Somerset Maugham and Jacqueline Huston, Picasso's favorite model. Said Cocteau after it was all over: "I'm against exhibitions. Hang pictures on a wall and you kill them."
